Read more Your stage plot will provide your audience with important information about your show, whether it's a wedding or party or a school play. This guide provides you with a deeper understanding of the purpose of a stage plot and how to create it. Create Your Stage Plot A stage plot, which is often referred to as a program, is an often-overlooked part of the rehearsal process. It is an important document used to communicate what your show is about, how it is divided into acts, numbers, and scenes, and what the set and lighting design will look like. It also provides the venue's requirements for stage setup and technical needs of the show. Even if you're working with a director, it is always important to include a stage plot in your rehearsal process. What is a Stage Plot? Stage Plots are usually made for wedding ceremonies, pageants, and school productions. However, a stage plot is a graphical document describing what your show looks like onstage. The stage plot itself becomes the source for your lighting and stage setup instructions, so if you are unable to produce one on your own, check with your stage designer, equipment manager, or lighting designer for the most accurate and up-to-date information on your stage design. Why Should I Have a Stage Plot? After the core content is assembled and the set is set up, stage managers and sound engineers will need information about what is happening on stage to get the most out of your live show. A stage plot is the most basic and important document you can create for your rehearsal process. Without a clear picture of what it will look like onstage, you can spend time looking for the right spotlights, dimmers, and portable toilets. As they will have access to your stage before your event, you'll want to make sure your hired crew can easily use the information in the plot to set the technical lighting and sound correctly. To create the best stage plot, you will need to have a clear understanding of your show as well as include any special requirements, such as special lighting used during your show. In addition, you will need to get permission to use the staging elements from your venue manager and venue lighting and sound designer to ensure they do not create
